OPINION & ORDER

ROSS, United States District Judge:

On September 17, 2024, I denied defendant Manuel Santos’s fifth motion for compassionate release pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(1)(A). See Op. & Order, Sept. 17, 2024 (“Op. & Order”), ECF No. 200. I found that recent amendments to the United States Sentencing Guidelines, see U.S.S.G. § 1B1.13(b)(6) (U.S. Sent’g Comm’n 2023), did not constitute extraordinary and compelling reasons for Mr. Santos’s release. Op. & Order at 5–6. I further concluded that none of the other issues raised by Mr. Santos rose to the level of an extraordinary and compelling reason for release. Id. at 6–7. Finally, I noted that the section 3553(a) factors weighed against Mr. Santos’s release. Id. at 7. These include the nature and circumstances of Mr. Santos’s offenses; his history and characteristics; and the need for the sentence to reflect the seriousness of his offense, promote respect for the law, and provide just punishment for his offense. See 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).

On October 2, 2024, I received Mr. Santos’s motion for reconsideration of my order denying his motion for compassionate release. See Def.’s Mot. Recons., ECF No. 201. His motion does not raise any new substantive arguments. While Mr. Santos continues to rely on Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99 (2013), and United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220 (2005), as I previously concluded, neither of these cases constitutes a “change in the law” such that U.S.S.G.

§ 1B1.13(b)(6) would apply to Mr. Santos's case. As Mr. Santos has not identified any other relevant change in the law, I reaffirm my finding that there are no extraordinary and compelling reasons for his release at this time.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, I deny Mr. Santos's motion for reconsideration.

SO ORDERED.
